I am a licensed mental health counselor and, as a portion of my practice, work with the Washington State Dept. of Veterans Affairs PTSD and War Trauma Counseling program. I have been working with Jack and Shasta through that program for the past year. We have been meeting weekly since the beginning. They have made significant progress both individually and as a couple.

Both of them have concerns with depression, anxiety and past traumas that have a significant impact on their lives. They have repeatedly spoken about their neighbor's intrusive behavior that has negatively impacted them and their minor daughter. This has caused stress and anxiety; caused concern for their personal security and safety.

I have seen these instances have had a very negative impact on them and has impeded their progress in therapy. They have, on the whole, done well in managing this but both have been triggered by her behavior. The behavior exhibited by the neighbor as described by them (and I trust the accuracy of the descriptions) is outrageous and intolerable under any circumstance. Recently, the neighbor has seemed to escalate her behavior in a hostile and threatening way that would test anyone's restraint.

It is clear that the neighbor's behavior has had in impact on Jack's diagnosis of PTSD and TBI (Traumatic Brain Injury) and has made treatment more difficult. The unwarranted and irrational interactions with the neighbor have been unpredictable and unwarranted. We have had to spend many hours in therapy to help him cope with these intrusions.

Similarly, Shasta has become fearful of going out into her own back yard because of the chance that the neighbor will appear and be abusive. Her therapy has also been negatively impacted by the neighbor and has made our work together more challenging. The feeling of helplessness from being unable to stop the intrusive and abusive behavior has made our work on their relationship harder.

Thank you and please contact me if I can be of further assistance.

Sincerely,
